Vincent P. Richards, PhD

From Wings to Tigers: Taking The Path Less Travelled

Taking a rather unorthodox path into academia, Dr. Richards is the quintessential late developer. As a "mature" student, he completed all of his higher education at NSU and now works as an assistant professor at Clemson University, where he is implementing a bioinformatics educational program and building a successful research laboratory. With an emphasis on human and animal health, his lab's major focus is to utilize genomics to study how bacterial pathogens evolve, adapt, and interact. His ultimate goal is for this knowledge to translate into improved disease intervention and prevention strategies.
